The proposed property is of an Italianate style with most of the decorative architectural elements still intact. It has the original brick sidewalks and wood siding as well. It even has many panes of the original poured glass in the windows and storms.

Inside the structure, the wide pine floor boards have been refinished and the pine woodwork and doors are intact. I feel that because of these said featured, together with my continuing effort to restore rather than to replace any part of it, my home should be designated a landmark.

I feel that the significance of this home is clearly shown by the manner in which all inhabitants of it have sought not to change it, but merely to reside in it for the last hundred years. I hope that by designating it a landmark, that future generations will be able to view it as I was fortunate to find it, beautifully unchanged.

An historic home belongs not to one individual, but to all those who share in our rich community heritage.

Karen Lee Williams
